TUES–SAT, 10AM–4PM
SUN, 1PM–4PM

The Rosenbaum House is the only Frank Lloyd Wright-designed structure in the state of Alabama. Designed in 1939 for Stanley and Mildred Rosenbaum, the Rosenbaum House is considered by many to be the purest example of Wright's Usonian design.

The Rosenbaum House is constructed of cypress, glass and brick, and has been meticulously restored. Its flat roofs and large overhanging eaves, the expanses of glass and the flowing space are all hallmarks of a Usonian. Typical of many of Wright's projects, the house also includes original furnishings designed by the architect.

The Rosenbaums were the sole owners and occupants until 1999, when the house was purchased by the City of Florence and opened as a museum.

Hollyhock House is Wright's first Los Angeles project. Built between 1919 and 1923, it represents his earliest efforts to develop a regionally appropriate style of architecture for Southern California. Taking advantage of Los Angeles' dry, temperate climate, Hollyhock House is a remarkable combination of house and gardens. In addition to the central garden court, each major interior space adjoins an equivalent exterior space, connected either by glass doors, a porch, pergola or colonnade. A series of rooftop terraces further extend the living space and provide magnificent views of the Los Angeles basin and the Hollywood Hills.

Designed by famed Chicago architect Louis Sullivan of the firm Adler & Sullivan in 1891-1892, the Charnley-Persky House is a National Historic Landmark as well as one of the few extant buildings that display the combined talents of Louis H. Sullivan and Frank Lloyd Wright. The house embodies Sullivan's desire to develop a new form of American architecture that would break with the past and would express new American values and ideals. Wright called it "the first modern house in America." This new form would be a basis for Wright's Prairie style and heralded a fundamental change in architectural style.

The Charnley-Persky House is recognized as a seminal house in the development of modern residential design as well as a keystone of the architectural philosophies of Sullivan and Wright.

Frank Lloyd Wright used his first home (1889) to explore design concepts that contain the seeds of his architectural philosophy. In his adjacent studio (1898), Wright and his associates created a new American architecture, the Prairie style. The Home and Studio was the birthplace of Wright's vision for a new American architecture. More than 100 buildings were executed by Wright's Oak Park Studio. The surrounding neighborhood has the highest concentration of Wright buildings in the world.

CLOSED TUES AND WED

One of the great masterpieces of 20th-century architecture and interior design, the Robie House synthesizes all of the major innovations of Wright's design philosophy. The definitive expression of Wright's Prairie style, it is also a precursor of modernism, featuring an open floor plan, sweeping horizontal planes, dramatic cantilevers, and long ribbons of leaded glass windows. Its revolutionary design makes it the most innovative and forward thinking of all Wright's Prairie houses.

SAT, 9AM–1PM

Unity Temple (1905-08) represents a defining moment in Frank Lloyd Wright's early career. Designed in Wright's Oak Park Studio for his own Unitarian congregation, it is one of the first public buildings in America to feature exposed concrete and is Wright's greatest public building of his Prairie era. The harmony of the building's strikingly geometric architecture and decorative elements exemplifies Wright's theory of organic design. Unity Temple announced a new era of innovation in modern architecture.

The John E. Christian House, which Frank Lloyd Wright named SAMARA, is a pristine example of his Usonian style. Revered as one of the most complete Wright homes in existence, SAMARA is one of the few homes still occupied by the original owner and client. Built in 1955-56, this home includes over forty of Wright's innovations, such as colored radiant-heated floors, flat roofs with overhanging eaves, large expanses of glass and indirect intensity-controlled lighting. Also, mitered glass corners function to extend nature into the living areas throughout the house.

SAMARA was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1992 and is currently being considered for National Historic Landmark designation.

Frank Lloyd Wright designed six hotels. Five were built, but only one remains. Originally opened in 1910 as the City National Bank and Park Inn Hotel, the property now functions as a 27-room boutique hotel following an extensive restoration/rehabilitation which was completed in 2011. The Historic Park Inn Hotel is designed in Wright's Prairie style and retains many historic details while featuring modern amenities. In addition to its individual significance, the building was the impetus for the development of a robust Prairie School presence in Mason City, which includes Wright's Stockman House and the Rock Crest/Rock Glen National Historic District, which is the largest concentration of Prairie School architecture on one contiguous site in the world.

Designed in 1915, the Allen House is considered the last of the Prairie houses, which Frank Lloyd Wright considered "among my best." Restored back to 1918, the house exemplifies Frank Lloyd Wright's philosophy of living in harmony with nature. The house was pivotal in the movement to the Usonian designs of 1935. Interior furnishings manufactured by Niedecken Walbridge represent the last of twelve collaborations. Considered by many visitors "the house of choice to live in!"

The Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum is home to one of the world's finest collections of modern and contemporary art. This innovative building, the youngest to be designated a New York City landmark, is itself one of the greatest works of the Guggenheim collection. In 1943, Solomon R. Guggenheim commissioned Wright to design a unique building to house his collection of avant-garde art. During the subsequent years of planning and design, Wright applied his vision of a fluid and organic architecture to the museum. Ground was broken in August 1956, and construction was completed in 1959, six months after Wright's death.

SHOP HOURS: 9:30AM-4:30PM

Designed by Frank Lloyd Wright as the country estate of Isabelle and Darwin Martin, Graycliff (1926-31) is set high on a bluff overlooking Lake Erie, with sweeping views of Canada beyond. The realization of Wright's integration of nature and architecture, Graycliff's three buildings are set amidst 8.5 acres of historic landscape by Wright. Acclaimed for its transparency (with views through the house of the lake itself), his design of Graycliff sparked a fundamentally new approach for Wright for the remainder of his long career. Experience how Wright imbued Graycliff with what he called "repose," the simplicity and calm of breathtaking architecture set amidst verdant acres of grounds on the brim of the lake.
